Please wait... ClipLogBoard Review: In the recent past, we have seen a surge in the number of software that perform the clipboard logging task. Some of them are created just to keep track of new entries and export the data to a database. Others provide a more user-friendly UI. ClipLogBoard is one of those tools. It takes a more conventional approach as it offers a simple interface and a number of options for configuration. This free software tool allows you to monitor your clipboard and record it in the manner you want. The interface of ClipLogBoard is quite simple, with a few configuration options and a few fields where you can type text. You start with the option to specify which hotkeys you want to use. By default, the enter key and the “M” key are used to send data to the clipboard. You can use them to capture the text that you select. The default hotkeys will work for most users. You may also add new ones, but be careful, because there are some built-in commands that may conflict with new hotkeys. For example, if you use the hotkey “CTRL + A” to capture text, you may want to remove it. As for the fields, you have to specify which text item you want to log in each field. In addition, you can add a date, time, or clipboard item type. Some examples of clipboards are URL, email, notes, or address. With all the steps done, you can now export the log file to a file. From the file’s properties, you can select the date and time to export the information. You can also specify a custom file name for the log file. ClipLogBoard is a simple yet useful tool for clipboard logging. It is available for Windows 32-bit and 64-bit operating systems. The interface is straightforward and there are some options for configuration. There are some built-in hotkeys that you can use to log text. Pros: Simple interface Hotkeys for copying to clipboard Cons: A few built-in hotkeys are not intuitive ClipLogBoard Latest Version: 8.0.0.1 Overall
