Make use of Jump 2 Registry to add a new folder to the system registry. This program has been designed to make it easy for you to add any record to the registry, which is normally a complex task that requires the use of RegEdit. The application automatically creates a batch script or VBscript file that you can double-click in order to access the record in Regedit. In addition to adding a new key, you can also assign a name and path to the generated shortcut file. Tested on Windows XP, Windows 7 and Windows 8. Tested on Windows 10. Included file types: .REG .BAT .SCR .VBS To download Jump 2 Registry, please click on the button below. Windows Registry Editor Version 5.00 #End A: You could go about this in a couple of different ways. There's a free utility called reg2key that will extract a string from a Registry key. I haven't tried this before, but I think it may work for you. If the key you're searching for is in the HKEY_CURRENT_USER portion of the registry, you could write a script that uses reg2key to extract the data from that key. These are just some ideas off the top of my head; you'll need to evaluate whether they work for your needs. A: Check out this short tutorial. You can access the key values in any application by calling the function OpenKey(key) using the following syntax: RegQueryValueEx(key, key_name, 0, type, data, &len) To open a key, call the OpenKey function with the following syntax: HKEY handle = 0; RegOpenKeyEx(HKEY_CURRENT_USER, key_name, 0, KEY_READ, &handle); The following statements open a key named "Software\Mozilla\Firefox" and read the first and last values from it: RegOpenKeyEx(HKEY_CURRENT_USER, "Software\Mozilla\Firefox", 0, KEY_READ, &handle); data_length = RegQueryValueEx(handle, "", 0, type, data, &len); RegCloseKey(handle); To access the second value in this key, you must first open the key and read the first value, then close the key and read the second value: HKEY handle = 0; RegOpenKeyEx(HKEY_CURRENT_USER, "Software\Mozilla\Firefox", 0, KEY_READ, &handle); int i; RegQueryValueEx(handle, "LastResort:", 0, type, data, &len);
