Oxford English For Careers Tourism 3 Student's Book Download

In this book students explore the techniques and skills needed for a career in tourism. They learn about the four-year tourism degree and the various qualifications and training options for vocational skills. They also learn about the professional qualifications that tourism managers need and how to become qualified themselves. The student's book contains about 90% of the course text in a casual style, with exercises throughout the text. The exercises have been designed to accompany and explain the lectures, and they are not left to the students to complete independently. The teacher's book contains solutions to all the exercises, plus additional marking guidelines. The full suite of teaching resources is available on the Internet at www.excel.ox.ac.uk/home/teachers Routledge1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to the treatment of gingivitis and other inflammatory conditions in human or animal oral tissues. 2. Description of Related Art Gingivitis is the inflammation of gingival tissue over the teeth, which results in excess accumulation of dental plaque. Because plaque serves as a site of bacterial proliferation, it is considered an important causative agent of gingivitis. Once the process of gingivitis is initiated, the consequences of the infection can become severe, if left untreated. Acute gingivitis can lead to periodontal disease, including gum recession, bleeding, and tooth loss. Chronic gingivitis may cause tooth decay, tooth sensitivity, and halitosis. Gum recession is the loss of gum tissue from the tooth root. Routinely, gum recession is due to disease, trauma or genetics. Tooth loss commonly results from gum recession and other root diseases. Tooth sensitivity is due to changes in the surface microstructure or to changes in the chemical composition of the tooth surface. Tooth sensitivity may be due to hypersensitivity of the tooth surface (also referred to as "intrinsic tooth sensitivity") or to irritation of the nerve ending in the tooth pulp (also known as "phantom tooth sensitivity"). Tooth sensitivity is perceived as a sharp, irritating and unpleasant sensation which occurs when temperatures rise in the tooth pulp, when the saliva or other fluids migrate along the root surface, or when foods or liquids come in contact with the tooth surface. Tooth sensitivity can also be due to the natural breakdown of enamel. Halitosis is the undesirable chemical or oral odour emanating from the mouth. This odour is often associated with the presence 3e33713323
