It does not include the player or image viewer which are part of a QuickTime installation. It will install the single shortcut to the Vista Codecs32bit Tools directory. And the below are all solutions in the right order: Make sure the plug-in that can play QuickTime video is installed and that it is being used by the browser, if you know how to check this from the PC info. You might have to download one of the plug-ins and try it in the browsers yourself if you can't find any information. Look in the system tray for the Videos/Clips group and the file type (MOV or 3GP) should be displayed. If this isn't displayed for you then perhaps it's in the wrong place (eg. if it's the Videos/Clips group but not displaying the type of file), or if you're not using the correct browser/version and it's not being displayed in the correct place. If it is there then check that it's installed correctly for your system (right version for your OS and browser) by looking in the Programs tab in Control Panel (Programs and Features). Maybe you're missing some of the other necessary codecs/plug-ins (to play 3GP or MOV) to make the video work, which is the case when you see the message below. I hear of a proposition to make the Department a separate branch of the Government. It might, with proper precautions, be well, but I am sure of this, that it would be a fire into which the world would rush with abundant material to feed it.
