A new post-baccalaureate training curriculum was implemented at Baylor College of Medicine in 1992. The post-baccalaureate curriculum, which involves an intensive, six-month preclinical and a second three-month clinical year, is described. This report describes the three-year results of such a program. The objectives of the program are to increase the number of doctors in primary care, develop a better understanding of the training experiences of underrepresented minority physicians, improve resident recruitment, and establish a more creative and effective educational structure. From 1992 to 1995, a total of 172 fellows participated in this program. Of these fellows, 81.9 percent completed the program successfully (77 of the 81.9 percent who entered the program completed it in six months) with a mean of 16.4 months' experience (range 5 to 42). Of those who completed the program, 74.8 percent successfully entered a residency training program and 73.7 percent of the residents who completed the program have chosen to remain in academic medicine. More than half of the participants successfully received fellowships during the first three years of the program. The advanced educational training afforded by the traditional residency program offered a very high degree of success in the first three years of the program.Q: dagger 2 java how to inject a 3da54e8ca3
