Where did the Montreal Canadiens go wrong in Game 7? Needless to say, the Habs dropped the puck in an empty building that was formerly home to the Toronto Maple Leafs, a team that went on to win its second consecutive Stanley Cup as a result. That should give you a good idea of just how little the Habs are used to winning anymore. They've now lost four of their last five Game 7's and haven't won one in their last three playoff series. That's how bad it has gotten. So, if you believe that the Habs should have won the last two, here are the biggest reasons why that didn't happen, listed in chronological order:

The Notifications Phone Call

You might not have caught this one, but it's arguably the biggest fix since the Bakersfield Condors were trying to make a hockey team in the American Hockey League instead of an arena full of Macca-loving fans. Make no mistake, all of the fixes in the previous two paragraphs were absolutely necessary. Don't try to minimize the dramatic steps the Habs had to take to get here. However, I'm willing to bet that they could have avoided one of the most embarrassing things any team has ever done in a NHL playoff game if they only went to the team's email, phone, and voicemail. That was the logical – even obvious – fix for the sad reality that the Montreal Canadiens didn't even know that they were going to lose in the seventh game of the series until they found out in the closing seconds. Had they just checked the proper media sources before the start of the game, this never would have happened. Jeff Angus/National Post The Winger Marc Bergevin's bold moves got him into this position, and he's probably the only person that can save the season for the Canadiens. But if he's put in this spot, he needs to be an assassin. Marc said he was willing to do anything possible to get the Habs home ice for the third straight year. That included picking up cheap players and trading draft picks for them. For the most part
