According to the Federal Institute of Economic Research (WIFO), skilled workers will increasingly play a key role in economic growth in the coming years. "Highly skilled workers, so-called 'knowledge workers', will become increasingly in demand. They provide a unique and increasingly important source of added value," says WIFO Director Hans-Joachim Voth in his annual report. According to current estimates, only a third of the jobs in Austria can be considered as "hard to fill". Although this proportion may be much higher for some sectors and occupations, it also does not take account of the knowledge-intensive jobs that are increasingly being outsourced. "We need to take the increasing importance of knowledge into account," says Voth. According to the WIFO Institute, the gap between the skills required and the supply of skills is expected to continue to increase in the future. In addition to this, a supply of labor is also increasing due to a rise in young people between the ages of 25 and 44 (the so-called "baby boom generation"). The so-called "baby boomers" are characterized by a high level of educational achievements and a knowledge base that they can put to good use in the labor market. To promote skills,
