The discussion in this chapter is geared toward beginning Photoshop users; however, professionals may also be interested in some of the tricks and tips we share. Setting up Photoshop Before you can start using Photoshop, you must prepare a folder that contains all the pictures, graphics, and other files you want to use. You should use the same folder for all your images. To get started, follow these steps: 1. Create a folder on your computer on which you will save all the files you will use. I recommend that you make a new folder for your Photoshop project. 2. Create a folder that contains all your images. Use this folder to save all your images. 3. Create a new document in the Photoshop program. The image in this book was created using a document size of 1600 pixels wide by 1200 pixels tall. 4. Choose File⇒New to create a new image or press . The New dialog box appears. You can either create a new image or open an existing image (see the upcoming "Starting with an existing image"). 5. Select the option Create a new image to make a new image. 6. Click OK to open the New dialog box. Use the File Name and Background drop-down menus to name your image. 7. Click the Background and then click OK in the New dialog box. The Background is selected. 8. Click the Type button and select None. 9. Click the Gradient button and then click OK. You don't see the Gradient overlay in this book (see the upcoming sidebar "Using the Gradient tool"), but you should see the gradient appear in the Gradient palette (Figure 3-1) when you select the Gradient tool. FIGURE 3-1: The Gradient tool enables you to specify color transitions across an image. 10. Click the Fill button and select the 50% Gray color from the list. 11. Click the Transparency button and enter a setting of 50% in the Transparency box. If you want to save the image in the new file, click the Save button (instead of the Save for Web & Devices button). 12. Click the Close button. Your image appears. You can use the Image Size dialog box to resize your image; see Book III, Chapter 4 for more information. The image you create

As computing devices become more ubiquitous in everyday life, the number of devices that can exchange data using the Universal Serial Bus (USB) protocol grows accordingly. Also, it is often desirable to combine data from different sources into a single data stream, such as a multimedia stream. For instance, a USB host can aggregate multiple audio and video streams from multiple USB-compatible devices in order to broadcast a USB-compatible multimedia stream. The USB protocol can use a special packet called the "Zero-Length Packet" (ZLP) to signal the end of the packet stream to a device. However, use of the ZLP requires the USB protocol to recognize the end of the packet stream at the beginning of the packet stream. To date, the USB protocol has not been extended to handle incomplete packet data streams (i.e., streams that do not include an entire packet in the packet stream)./* * Copyright (C) 2011-2018 Intel Corporation. Piping Time: The best time of the day to beat the heat Friday Jul 18, 2012 at 12:01 AM A new study has found the best time of the day to beat the heat Joseph Olson A new study published on the Mayo Clinic Proceedings Journal has found the best time of the day to beat the heat. The study examined the air temperature and humidity across the entire United States in order to map heat-health conditions. The study also looked at the temperatures inside and outside, as well as the humidity. "Our research shows that it is best to avoid heat waves when temperatures are lower outside than indoors, and that in most regions of the United States, the best time of the day to avoid heat-related health problems is in the morning, when the outdoor temperatures are cooler than inside," says the study's lead author, Dr. Steven Noll, from the Department of Preventive Medicine in the Mayo Clinic College of Medicine in Rochester, Minn. The study showed that during a heat wave, conditions are less favorable for avoiding health effects. "That does not mean it is impossible to fight off the heat in some regions, as it is still possible to have sufficient water, shade and air conditioning," he says. "However, people should know that going from being uncomfortably hot inside to being uncomfortably hot outside may lead to health problems," he says. The best time of the day to avoid heat-related illnesses is from noon to 3 p.m., when temperature and humidity is at its lowest, and temperatures inside the home are cooler than outdoors. During the hottest part of the day - noon to 3 p.m. - the difference in air temperature between the inside and outside of the house is the least favorable. This is because during this time, both the temperature and humidity are at their highest, making it hard to cool people down. As an alternative, people should use air conditioners or fans to keep themselves cooler, if available. "Even though the air conditioner will cool you down, it won't protect you from getting heat stroke if you are sweating too much," says Noll. "Instead, it is important to drink plenty of fluids."
