Q: Create line of positive slope in Illustrator I have to create a line in Adobe Illustrator (since I can't export from 3D Max) that starts at (0,0) and ends at (50,0), but has a slope of 5. It doesn't have to be perfectly smooth (it should be more like a straight line) but I don't want to go beyond 3D capabilities of Adobe Illustrator. I tried creating a line (50,0) to (0,50) and used 3D from the perspective tool but it's not smooth and it starts to get really difficult from there. Any ideas on how to do this? A: If you are looking for a smooth curve on the XY plane, one way of achieving this is to use Bezier. Select your curve, as shown in the following image. Then, select Convert → Path → Bezier to create a new path from that curve. The top right corner of the following image shows the new path after it has been edited. Notice that the distance between the two points has been increased. You can repeat this process for any number of segments. For example, if you wanted a smooth curve with 3 segments, you would first convert the curve, as shown in the first image. The second image shows the 3rd segment converted. Then, repeat the process as many times as necessary, until you get the desired effect. If you want a curved path, then you can use a regular brush to add the curved shape. To add a brush to the path, click on the path in the Path panel, and then click the Brush tool. (Alternatively, you can add a brush to the brush panel directly, by clicking on the red + icon on the panel.) The image below shows the brush tool added to a path. Then, brush over the area where you want the curved shape to appear, to add it. If you want more control over the brush, there are many options. If you want to make a path that is slightly curved and is made of straight segments, you can do so by converting a bezier curve into a polyline. To do this, hold
