What's new in ASCIIDENT - Science Fiction Novel:

fish Martha, hero of many mysteries, left us to an early death. Although she is the scientific expert behind the Gloucester High School mascot, her true powers were in her capacity as an astronomer and a writer. I am a direct product of her indoctrination in both these pursuits. I attended the LHS faculty-sponsored publication, the GLOUCESTER HIGH SCHOOL CLUES, as did my first and second husband. He also is a featured author of this column. I was elected editor by my dedicated friends and supporters during my extended hospitalization following the diagnosis of a rare malignant brain disease and death in 2001. Today, my friends continue to try valiantly to keep the spirit of our beloved Martha alive by, among other things, keeping the columns updated. We are enthusiastically indebted to Dr. Bruce K. Bechtel, an internationally recognized leader in the field of geophysical science (Earth science). He and his faculty colleagues at the University of Delaware developed the system of galactic globular clusters and the corresponding equations to find the planetary position of the earth and its moon by timing certain earth-moon interactions. I remember my first exposure to the Bechtel equation when we got our first two-line weather radio. You remember the days before our computer when a fuel-up in your station wagon left you completely numb to the fact that your marriage was already over. I began listening for the weather's call for help. There was only one thing that I could depend on then: the two-line weather radio that went nearly unintelligible in the typical rumbling of cataclysmic storms and came to life when it was obvious that the equation was working out. These things took considerable time, which we were hardly complaining of, with the exception of the endless similes that were being invented to explain what meteorologists were saying in those early days. Did you imagine that a massive number of planets were journeying through our solar system at the speed of light trying to meet with our moon? Here's something that should help you remember the basics: The planets are drawn into the Earth's gravitational field when the planets are more than one-third of the distance of the moon from the earth. WEATHER PROBLEMS This is where it begins to get foggy. The problem, of course, is that a two-line weather radio in 1941 (and 1941 is not much different from 1941) with very few stations serving a very small
