Perth Glory is happy to confirm that the Hyundai A-League blockbuster against the Newcastle Jets on Monday 6 September has been switched to 6:00pm on One HD. The clash will be played at nib Stadium at Carrington Gardens, which is on the grounds of the Newcastle campus of the University of Newcastle. Perth Glory Managing Director Tony Sage said the decision to switch the match from its scheduled start time of 8:40pm was a direct result of work to improve matchday services in the Central Coast region. "Perth Glory is committed to providing a top class experience for our guests at all our matches at nib Stadium, and we are delighted that the clash between the Glory and Jets will be played at 6:00pm on Monday 6 September," Sage said. "Newcastle is an important part of Perth's AFL journey and we're excited to be able to bring a match to the Newcastle fans at nib Stadium." While most of Perth Glory's season has been played in front of a sell-out crowd at nib Stadium, there have been unsold allocation match-day tickets remaining at various matches this season. In addition to the 6:00pm kick off time, 7:40pm start times will also be available for those who have not bought tickets for the match. Sage said the decision was made with the best interests of fans in e79caf774b

ACER, AOC, Asus, Creative Labs.The newborn infant is at risk for intracerebral hemorrhage (ICH) because of increased bleeding risk related to the still developing brain. Modern neurosurgical technology, with careful planning and execution, can minimize ICH in very small infants. In larger infants, it is possible to preserve brain oxygenation by implementing a cerebral perfusion technique during the critical period of hypoxic ischemic encephalopathy, i.e. during the first few days of life. After this critical period, decompressive hemicraniectomy can be considered when cerebral edema or increased intracranial pressure impedes cerebral perfusion. As expected, early removal of the skull far away from the middle cerebral artery causes only a mild degree of disability and does not lead to an increased perinatal mortality. Skull-stripping the thalamus, basal ganglia or cortex (hemicellulary sparing) should be performed with neurosurgical instruments only if the lesions are located in eloquent areas. This can be performed in larger neonates without increasing the perinatal mortality compared to the standard craniotomy. Infants whose neurological injuries preclude safe neurosurgical procedures have an increased perinatal mortality. No general guidelines are available for the timing of decompressive hemicraniectomy, but optimal timing of decompression is likely to be during the neonatal period when the neuroprotective effect of hypothermia is most effective. Complex birth injuries, such as major cerebral vascular compromise, associated with multiple skull fractures, can be best managed with extensive craniotomy during which protective measures for cerebral hypothermia can be instituted, followed by the decision to decompress. The neurosurgical management of traumatic brain injury requires the use of intracranial pressure monitoring (ICP) to guide therapy. The ideal method of ICP monitoring is still under investigation. Arterial line devices are currently used, but pressure fluctuations from the major circulation are transferred to the brain via the cerebrospinal fluid. This generates a lot of confounding data in the ICP waveforms that limits
