For most uses, for example, when adding a Web site to your portfolio, you're going to want to go with JPEG. When you want to print your photo, you normally choose JPEG or TIFF. TIFF is the best choice for archiving and storing long-term files and is compatible with all programs and image viewers; JPEG files, which store the image in a digital format, are commonly used for images on the Web and in e-mail or publications; and PNG8 is the optimized version of PNG, a more straightforward, uncompressed format.
