Q: Is it possible to get a generic list of viewmodel types? I'm quite new to MVC so I apologize if this is really easy... I have a controller class that takes a view model from a view and populates it. I've created a Generic view model. It has several properties that I will want to initialize with the right data, depending on which view it is coming from. So my question is this... I want the controller to know what type of object will be passed in and then assign all the relevant properties. Is this possible? Would the best way to do it be in the generic view model class? A: Yes, use the generic type parameter to tell your controller what the types of your view models are: public class MyController : Controller { public ActionResult About() { var viewModel = new AboutViewModel(); return View(viewModel); } } public class AboutViewModel { public T Value { get;

set; } } public class MyType1 { public string SomeProp { get; set; } } public class MyType2 { public string SomeProp { get; set; } } Then your views are just standard views that implement the AboutViewModel interface. At its core, cryptocurrency is a Web 3.0 protocol. Developers and researchers are building in new ideas at a rapid pace.
