To help you navigate the market, as well as to market and supply coffee in Australia, we have created this coffee knowledge tool. Using images, data, and simple explanations, these tools will help you better understand the primary coffee qualities, growing regions, and most importantly, how they impact your coffee supply chain.

Q: How do I save my settings in a Chrome app with web storage? I'm trying to create an app for chrome and I'm trying to save information in the web storage. I saw the API from chrome docs, but couldn't find any way of saving my data there. Can someone tell me what I'm doing wrong? If it's not possible, can I store the information in the chrome console? I noticed, that all my data is stored there, but I don't want to loose any of my data if I stop my app or Chrome is restarted.

JSFiddle var settings = chrome.storage.sync; chrome.storage.local.set({'test' : 'I am a test'}); chrome.storage.local.get('test', function(res) { alert("The value is: " + res.test); });
```

I created a JSFiddle for this.

A: If you want something like localStorage on the web you need to use the local API. The get method returns an object and not the value you just set, in your case:

```
chrome.storage.local.get('test', function(res) { alert("The value is: " + res.test); });

This way, your app will be able to store your info with chrome.storage.local.set() and local API. You can also access the localStorage API to save your data. See the documentation here. Note: It's localStorage not syncStorage.
