The authors note that this is estimated based on economic models, yet a reduction of such size would essentially halt the trend of increasing economic burden associated with radiologic services, which has resulted in a $24 billion investment in the last decade alone. "In this era of cost containment, it is important to recognize that diagnostic radiology is essentially the most expensive part of healthcare and that the healthcare cost can be reduced only by getting the radiologists to do less," the authors conclude. The IMSI (International Mobile Subscriber Identity) is a mobile subscriber identity in the mobile communication standard. Since all mobile subscriber identities of mobile users need to be unique, the IMSI is a globally unique identifier that is assigned to the mobile network subscriber. The IMSI is primarily used for security purposes: when the user wants to access the network, a mobile communication network will communicate the IMSI of the user to the authentication server and the authentication server will check the IMSI to ensure that the user is allowed to access the network. This IMSI is stored in the authentication server. Currently, the IDMSI (International Mobile Subscriber Identity of the 3GPP mobile system) will be the primary IMSI of all the mobile network subscriber and this IDMSI will be stored in the authentication server. One type of mobile user authentication scheme that is proposed by the 3GPP is called IP-based authentication. In the IP-based authentication, the mobile user is required to input his/her IMSI into the authentication server, and the authentication server will compare the IMSI with its stored IMSI. If the result from the comparison shows that the two are the same, the authentication server will allow the user access to the network. According to the IP-based
