An MRAM uses the magnetoresistive effect of ferromagnetic material to sense a bit of information as a change in the resistance between two ferromagnetic layers separated by a non-magnetic material. The information stored in the MRAM is determined by the orientation of the magnetic elements in the ferromagnetic layers. For example, in case of a magnetic element that becomes a high resistance state, the logic value "1" is stored. On the other hand, in case of a magnetic element that becomes a low resistance state, the logic value "0" is stored. FIG. 1 is a block diagram of a conventional MRAM 100. The MRAM 100 includes an array 104 of memory cells 110. Each memory cell 110 includes a word line (WL) 112, a write bit line (WBL) 114, and a read bit line (RBL) 116. The memory cell 110 includes a magnetic element 102 that is placed in a magnetic field to be programmed or written to the cell 110 by switching the magnetic field of the magnetic element 102 using the magnetic field generated by a current flowing through the write bit line 114. The magnetic element 102 is a ferromagnetic element, such as a Fe film or a NiFe alloy film. The MRAM 100 operates by sensing a bit of information from the memory cell 110 as a change in the resistance of the magnetic element 102 between the bit line 116 and the write bit line 114. The MRAM 100 includes a sensing circuit 120 that is connected to the read bit line 116 and the write bit line 114 for sensing the change in
