Cssman.exe. Fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography in malignant melanoma of the skin. Although numerous studies have been published assessing the role of ^{18}F -fluorodeoxyglucose (FDG) positron emission tomography (PET) in cutaneous malignant melanoma (MM), few have been performed in which the histology of the MM has been confirmed at the time of the FDG-PET. The goal of this study was to use FDG-PET in patients with proven histologic malignant melanoma to assess malignant melanoma and correlate the findings with the stage of the disease. In a prospective study, 28 consecutive patients with histopathologic-proven MM were imaged with FDG-PET. The following data were analyzed: mean patient age, sex, site of the primary melanoma, date of the examination, number of total lesions and the size and depth of the lesions. Maximum standardized uptake values (SUVmax) were calculated for each lesion for further analysis. Statistical analysis was performed with the nonparametric Wilcoxon rank test. A total of 37 lesions were investigated. The mean patient age was 62 years (range, 26-90 years), 12 patients (42%) were male, and median follow-up was 14 months. A total of 31 lesions were Stage I (84%) and 6 were Stage II (16%). In the 31 lesions with Stage I disease (mean SUVmax, 6.09 +/- 1.89), 1 lesion had metastases. In the 6 lesions with Stage II disease (mean SUVmax, 8.01 +/- 1.83), 4 lesions had metastases. A total of 36/37 (97%) lesions with SUVmax greater than 4 had metastases, and a total of 30/31 (97%) lesions with SUVmax of less than 4 had no evidence of distant metastasis. FDG-PET findings correlated well with melanoma stage in patients with MM. FDG-PET has a potential role in the staging of MM.
