Serum creatinine measurement is the current standard for glomerular filtration rate (GFR) estimation. Recently, a new generation of serum creatinine assays, reporting at least one not only a more accurate measurement, but also a lower within-run and between-run variability, have been developed. In the present study, we investigated the performance of these assays to estimate GFR in an HIV-infected population and to assess their accuracy in detecting changes of renal function in response to antiretroviral treatment. Serum samples from 41 HIV-infected patients were prospectively collected. Serum creatinine was measured in all samples using both an enzymatic assay (Arsenazo) and a colorimetric assay (TruGlic). For GFR estimation, creatinine clearance (CrCl) was determined by the Cockcroft and Gault formula. Estimated GFR (eGFR) was determined by the new generation assays compared with CrCl. Routine laboratory measurements were compared with the new assays. Equations for estimating

Time-dependent expression of cytokeratin and stress proteins during cytotoxic drug-induced regression of rat hepatoma cells. To find out the correlation between cytokeratin (CK) expression and stress proteins in the process of rat hepatoma cell (RHC-I) spontaneous regression, the time-dependent expression of CK and stress proteins in RHC-I cells was observed after administration of 10 micrograms/ml cis-platinum (cis-Pt) in the culture medium. Cellular morphology was evaluated by staining using Wright-Giemsa, May-Grünwald-Giemsa, and Giemsa-Mayer stains. The expression of CK and stress proteins was analyzed by immunocytochemistry and immunofluorescence. A complete cessation of cell proliferation and a decrease in the M phase fraction occurred in RHC-I cells 6 days after treatment with cis-Pt. The expression of CK-18 and 78-kDa stress protein (HSP78) began to increase in parallel with the termination of proliferation, although the expression of CK-19 was more gradual. The expression of 90-kDa HSP90 and 72-kDa HSP70 began to increase after the end of proliferation. The redistribution of CK and stress proteins from cytosolic to nuclear fractions occurred when cells in the G2-M phase of the cell cycle were arrested. These results suggest that the reduction of the M phase fraction in cis-Pt-treated RHC-I cells is correlated with an increase in CK-18 and HSP78 expression. Our results also suggest that CK-19 is associated with the mechanism of stress protein expression in cis-Pt-treated RHC-I cells.
