To begin, let's examine the potential of this brand-new video game feature. To accomplish the game's many new innovations, FIFA 22 focuses on enhancing every aspect of the experience through motion capture technology. FIFA 22 looks to add an extra layer of variety to a beloved game series with a multitude of game-changing features. The more we learn about these innovations, the clearer it becomes that the team behind FIFA 22 is fully dedicated to building a high-quality experience. THE NEW HYPERMOTION TECHNOLOGY The motion-capture suits worn by players, and also the high-precision and high-frame-rate cameras that captured the movements, are used in the development of this brand-new video game feature. During the first day of a motion capture shoot, the movement performed by players was recorded. The players trained on and executed specific movements for the motion-capture cameras to collect — such as acceleration, velocity and spin. This motion was then fed into the simulation engine. In order to achieve the maximum fidelity of this gameplay feature, information was collected from many players and many matches over the course of many years. The simulation engine then used the information from the players' movements to achieve a level of accuracy never before seen in a FIFA video game. The development team became so dedicated to the implementation of this feature, they even made their own motion capture suits to ensure the best data collection for gameplay accuracy. The combination of high-precision cameras and motion capture suits allowed the development team to capture the actual movements and motions of the players, allowing for the largest, most diverse set of data to date. The quality of this game feature was reliant on both accurate and high-quality motion data. Each play of the match was captured over several camera shots and the data was later gathered to achieve the best possible accuracy. The speed and frequency of the data being collected was all incredibly important for the implementation of the HyperMotion Technology. The overall quality of motion capture suits on the market today cannot compare to the special collection of suits built by the development team for FIFA 22. The special FIFA 22 player suits designed and built by the development team allowed the player data to collect at a much higher frame rate and captured the movements of the player in much greater detail. The suits worn by players were like a cockpit for the players, capturing the player's every movement and
