demonstration of previously unreported technique details, analysis of the diagnostic yield for lymphoma, and evaluation of technical and inherent limitations.

There are few published endobronchial ultrasound (EBUS) studies evaluating the role of EBUS-guided transbronchial needle aspiration (TBNA) in lymphoma.

We reviewed the technique, diagnostic yield, and technical limitations of the procedure. Retrospective review of the records of all patients who underwent EBUS-TBNA for lymphoma at our institution from December 1, 2000, to December 1, 2010. The data were collected and analyzed for all the studies, procedural technique, and complications and sensitivities. EBUS-TBNA was performed in 55 patients. The mean age was 54 years (range 27-81 years) and the male-to-female ratio was 1.7:1. Lymphomatous disease was found in the upper and middle mediastinum in 83% and 17%, respectively. Malignant lesions were located in the right (n = 22) and left (n = 16) lungs. The technical success rate was 100%. Cytologic examination revealed adequate smears in 61% of the smears (27/44). Of the 37 inadequate smears, 19 (51%) were due to technical difficulty and 18 (49%) were due to poor or nonexistent cellular material. The sensitivity and specificity of the technique in the diagnostic workup were 59% (25/43) and 100% (24/24), respectively. All of the 18 false-negative results were related to technical difficulties. The six false-positive diagnoses were related to an infectious process. No adverse events occurred. The EBUS-TBNA technique is a useful, safe, and accurate modality for the evaluation of mediastinal lymphomas, including lymphomas with negative computed tomography scans.Q
