A Game Project made by Sean Collew Genre: Clickers Intended Audience: Any Platforms: Windows more info: There are a bunch of levels of varying difficulty ranging from things that are tricky, to tricky things that are more. There are different levels of challenge in terms of timing and reaction times because there are multiple projectiles of different speeds that may or may not hit you. It's also a timed game, in that a level will have a goal timer that may not be more than 25 seconds long. When a level is over or your run is ended for whatever reason, the game is really hard, or really hard things happen and the game is really hard. The game is actually really hard, and to make a bad pun, the game is really hard. In the game, you have to press A to make your character move left and right, W to jump, and mousewheel or arrow keys to fly. Sometimes, you may have to use both. You may also have to avoid/interact with objects, and fly through, or even around and between objects. When you fly, you may end up bouncing off a wall. To get around certain obstacles, you might need to fly between platforms or bounce off of objects. Because the game is so hard, there are no microtransactions. If you run into any sort of problem with the game, support will be added. But, with all that said, if there's anyone who wants to really try and beat the game, they will have to try really hard. It is really hard. The hardest challenge I have found in the game is the Ethereal Challenge. For players who have gotten the Ethereal Battle achievement, there may be a run where the game starts out relatively easy, but something pushes you towards the harder puzzles. However, there is a way around this, in that if you get the Ethereal Puzzle achievement, you can do one of the puzzles where you have two or more parts and you have to place them in order on the screen. It's not the hardest, but you may still get hit by a bad thing or miss a good thing a lot. The hard thing about Project Crimson is that the game is really hard, and there's really hard levels. The developer is aware that Project Crimson, a one person team of Sean Collew, is really hard
