Kontekstual. Japanese destroyer Kakegawa (1919) The was a of the Imperial Japanese Navy, nicknamed 'Long-Shoulder' because of her tall superstructure. The wooden-hulled destroyer was completed in 1919. In 1923 the destroyer was reclassified as an auxiliary cruiser. In 1940 the ship was badly damaged in the attack on Pearl Harbor. The vessel was scuttled by her crew in order to avoid capture, and destroyed by subsequent US bombing during the Battle of Midway. Design and description Kamegawa had an overall length of, a beam of, and a draft of. She displaced at standard load and at deep load. The ship had a complement of 743 officers and men. The Kamegawa was powered by two Yamoto IX-Type geared steam turbines, each driving one propeller shaft, using steam provided by four Kampon Type PG type water-tube boilers. The turbines were designed to produce, and they carried the ship to a speed of. The ship carried enough fuel oil to give her a range of at. The ship was armed with six 40-caliber 12-centimeter Type 93 guns in single mounts, and six 45-caliber 12-centimeter Type 92 guns in twin mounts amidships. Two of her 40-caliber guns were removed in the re-armament. Her five guns were supplied with 1,200 shells, while her four guns could each use 500 rounds. She was also armed with six Type 93 torpedo tubes mounted on the deck edge. The large ship was protected by an armored belt that ranged in thickness from amidships to a negligible amidships. The armor was added as part of the re-armament in 1923. The damage control equipment consisted of 10 depth charge throwers and four depth charge chutes on the sides of the hull. The ship was also equipped with two anti-aircraft guns: 37-caliber Type 96 AA guns in single mounts. Construction and career The Kamegawa was laid down at the Uraga Dock
