What's new:

Grows Strongly The July 16 court ruling in the case of Ba Jin, the "child of the Party," and the Communist Party's dissolution of his National People's Congress represent the Party-state's efforts to erode the strength of civil society in China. The July 20 ruling in the "Class Two" criminal case against Chen Wei was another attack on civil society. The July 26 verdicts in the case of Hu Jia and his two fellow activists in the Mudanjiang No. 3 Detention Center are the final attempt to destroy the very idea of civil society in China. It was April 2007 when little Ba Jin slipped from his mother's loving embrace and fell into the hands of the Chinese regime. As the only child of poor farmers in Yongchuan County, Ba Jin did nothing wrong. Like millions of other Chinese children, he went to school every day, played outside, collected firewood and drew pictures. When the students from Ba Jin's school in April 2005 presented an essay-writing contest, he composed a piece about freedom of speech, which contained a rather explicit critique of the Chinese Communist Party. That was the first of many sinister encounters with the regime's political police that would destroy Ba Jin's childhood and adult life. In June 2005, Ba Jin was taken to three different interrogation rooms, cuffed, threatened, insulted, interrogated for almost 48 hours and diagnosed with "ideological pollution." They destroyed his pen, skewered his notes on Freedom of Speech and ordered him to "unswear his thoughts," "stop studying democracy" and "immediately leave for a remote and unfrequented place to re-educate." These periods of "reeducation" unfolded until January 2006. On that day, Ba Jin was hauled off to Tianjin to "teach" at the Mekong Normal College of Foreign Languages. Ba Jin in court. His detention lasted until December 4, when he was expelled from the Party along with two fellow students. Only now can Ba Jin, a bright, red-haired, strong boy in a white T-shirt and blue jeans, return to the normalcy of his childhood. He has lost what a normal China meant for him as a child. During his fourth period of "re-education," while he was a student in China, I knew a man named Hao Yushu. Though he was careful not to be labeled a "rights activist," Hao had been arrested

Vendor Chronicles: Zombie Apocalypse combines the fun of a trading card game and the management of a post-apocalyptic world. You will be thrown into a post-apocalyptic scenario as one of the many Traders who managed to survive and make it out to the shady east coast. Your objective: to make it out, find a new life and thrive in a world full of loneliness and terror! Vendor Chronicles: Zombie Apocalypse - Apocacypic Survival Simulator is currently in alpha. Bugs are normally fixed on a daily basis and not becoming publicly known until the game is closer to a complete, stable and feature complete build. Please do not leave negative feedback without providing a line-by-line bug report. A: I could write a book about vendor communities. My total experience is over 20 years, and I have had it happen to me a dozen times. Let me share one of my more successful experiences. I was traveling in a bus that had no place to sleep. All of the seats were full, and the bus was already at capacity. I had a sleeping bag, but I didn't have a pillow, because I had tossed it out the window to make room for food and water. I was also being harassed by three machete wielding bad guys, and nobody else seemed like they wanted to help me out. Finally, the bus driver got off the bus to let somebody else through. Before he got off, he said to me, "Here's what I'm going to do. I'm going to jump off the bus. You can run off, or you can stay here." The idea of jumping off that bus was completely shocking to me, but I remember that I was not prepared for life on my own. I took a minute, and then I asked myself, "What do I really want here?" I wanted to find my wife and kids, but that was a long ways away, so my first thought was, "I just want to survive. I just want to be able to feed myself and my family." I made up my mind to stay on the bus, and I did. Even though I had no hope of a good chance of surviving, I stayed. I didn't know how to find any of the things I needed, but I knew that I had to keep at it until I found them. It took me months, but eventually I figured out how to start cooking, how to
