I have just started reading up on the Google App Engine platform. It appears that it can be used as a back-end web server for hosting some basic web apps. The question is, would it be possible to use it as a backend for a web app that sends data to MySQL via PHP, and then stores the MySQL data in to MySQL via PHP on another computer? I am just wondering if there are any limitations with this setup, or if it is possible. It is worth noting that the data being stored on MySQL, is on an isolated server, and that data will not be used by any clients at all. A: Yes, you can, and it's a great way to put your PHP and MySQL onto AppEngine. There is a PHP data storage module, it's pretty new and not that well documented yet, but you can take a look at the source code: Q: ionic 2 : use createMultipleFilePicker over the createFilePicker I want to use this pug script :

Monopoly board games are among the most popular games for you, your families and friends. If you have never had the chance to play one before, you are about to find out about the rules of the game in this Monopoly Live Game Guide. Monopoly live games are so much fun for all ages. Imagine a really large game board and a group of friends sitting around a table. At the center of the table is a live Monopoly board game. The game allows everyone to take turns playing specific positions on the board and also to move their own tokens around the board. A game of Monopoly is simple. It is a game where players buy properties and then rent them out. The person who owns the property with the most money at the end of the game wins. Before the game begins, each of the players selects a number of tokens which represent themselves. They then each buy properties on the board. The properties on the Monopoly board live game board are like the properties in Monopoly the board game. The properties include hotels, shopping centres, racing courses, and houses. You can acquire some of these properties by paying for them with a specific number of money. Each player is assigned a turn as well as one set of tokens. Players are not allowed to reuse their tokens. When someone's token lands on one of the properties, that player is allowed to move it to another property. They may do this by choosing to "Go to Jail". Players may also buy additional properties by paying for them with money. In addition to the properties already on the game board, there are a number of special properties. For instance, there are a number of railroad stations, parks, and transportation centres on the game board. The prices of these properties can be determined by the players and will vary based upon their status. The properties that are already on the board are also available to rent out to other players. The rental prices can also be determined by the players. During the game, one of the players will rent out each of the properties available to rent. In addition to the properties that are actually on the board, there are also a number of Monopoly board games that can be played in real life. These additional properties include tax collectors, double crossing the tracks, change houses, and additional taxi cabs. Each of these additional properties is paid for in the same manner as all the other properties. For instance, if you had double

Q: Безопасная передача данных в php Здравствуйте. Работаю с php-сервером, написал асинхронную задачу и не могу найти безопасную практику отправки данных через посредников. Что лучше использовать? Использовать GET запрос или POST? Или вообще вообще так сделать нельзя? И по передаче через сервер некоторые данные конкретно и безопасно ли это? Просто в некоторых формах выполняются сабмиты всяких параметров, а некоторые безопасно ли такое делать? A: POST запрос лучше, и это пот

An orthographic stage of N400 latencies: it is not a response to invalid word letters, as previously thought. Based on known characteristics of the N400 component, an auditory word-oddity effect as well as an orthographic position effect have been found in the latency of this component. These effects, however, do not exclude the existence of an orthographic stage of the N400. Therefore, the present study was undertaken to test whether in fact the orthographic stage of the N400 component would be found. To this end, 16 subjects were presented with sequences of a word and a pseudoword. Each of the sequence components was made up of one to three letters differing from the preceding element of the sequence. When the preceding element was a pseudoword, N400 latencies were found to be dependent on the number of letters differing from the preceding pseudoword and on the position of the letters in the sequence. This pattern of results is consistent with a model according to which N400 latencies were due to the parallel processing of orthographically related letter chunks. The assumption that the orthographic stage of the N400 latency contains contributions to processes that may be involved in semantic judgment but are unrelated to the N400 latency further supports the notion that the process generating the N400 is rather general, with several functional facets.¹

Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to the art of polishing stones, and more particularly to apparatus and method for polishing the crown of such a stone. 2. Description of the Prior Art One of the principal steps in the fabrication of many products, such as cutlery, jewelry, mirrors, and tiles, is the turning of one or more stones into a finished product, such as the crown of a gem. Often this is done in the context of a similar step to produce a final product that has a higher quality than a mere raw stone. For example, an uncut stone may be cut into faceted gemstones, or a raw or uncut stone may be machined into a sinker which is then polished to a point. Similarly, a raw stone may be shaped and cut to a selected configuration and then polished to the desired finish. For purposes of brevity, in this description, the steps of turning one or more stones into a finished product will be referred to hereinafter simply as polishing. In the polishing of stones, it is desirable to achieve a uniform and predictable polishing action with a minimum of down-time. One
