The present invention relates to a static-type preventing safety device of a vehicle seat. More specifically, the present invention relates to a static-type preventing safety device of a vehicle seat, which prevent a user from putting weight in a seat back of the vehicle seat when the vehicle seat is inclined backward, and prevent the vehicle seat from being folded with weight being applied to the seat back. Vehicles are equipped with seat belts for the purpose of protecting a passenger (i.e., a driver and a passenger) from an external impact when a collision occurs. However, in recent years, when a vehicle is coming into contact with an external object, such as a building, a pole, a sign, etc., and at the same time, the vehicle is rapidly inclined backward, the passenger's body and the seat belt are rapidly inclined backward, and may be incased in the seat back or the passenger may be injured. As a result, a static-type preventing safety device is installed on the rear of the vehicle seat to prevent the user's body from being incased in the seat back when the vehicle is rapidly inclined backward. A structure of such a static-type preventing safety device is disclosed in Korean Patent Publication No. 1997-54686 (the disclosure of which is herein incorporated by reference in its entirety). The traditional static-type preventing safety device for a vehicle seat includes a pair of first links connected to each other in the middle by an axle, a pair of second links connected to each other in the middle by the axle, a first rotating part rotating the first links and the second links around the axle, and a second rotating part rotating the second links around the axle. However, the traditional static-type preventing safety device has the following problems. First, when the vehicle seat is folded or unfolded, due to an excessive load applied to the vehicle seat, the first and second links are disconnected. The safety device is rapidly released, which has a direct effect of increasing a load of the load applied to the vehicle seat in the process of the vehicle seat being folded. Second, when a front frame (or) a back frame of the vehicle seat is inclined backward, the vehicle seat is folded, and at this time, if the vehicle seat is inclined forward by a load applied to the seat back, the first and second links of the safety device may be disconnected. Third, when the vehicle seat is inclined backward, the first and second links of the safety device may not be connected, and the
