for the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn decisions of the U.S.

Courts of Appeals In response to this question, American states have no obligation to follow decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, and have their own doctrine of the thing(s) arising under federal law. This question involves a decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit and an assertion that the constitution says the opposite. That's a judgment call. What section of the U.S. constitution, which must be interpreted as a precedent in such cases, says the Supreme Court has a Constitutional duty to follow decisions of the Court of Appeals? A: The Supreme Court can overturn a decision of a Court of Appeals in the following cases: When a case is brought to the Supreme Court on appeal from a federal Court of Appeals bff6bb2d33

A blog post updating our list of space-based games. Read on if you'd like to know if you're good at killing stuff. Random thoughts: It's always a pleasure to see a post where I haven't been mentioned before. Announcer v. 1.0 has returned and I've not been mentioned before:

Random thoughts: Onward. You will continue to see more and more of these posts! Fun trivia from Announcer's Launch Day, 25 years ago: I had already played the game in 1993, and the first one I actually post about is from 1994. Almost a full decade. There is a sad lack of precisely accurate French-language statistics, e.g.: "[S]ome 65% of French gamers never finish a game once they start it. These gamers seem to be very difficult to influence in that 95% of the titles published for them never seem to change their behaviors." "The average penetration rate is rather reassuring: 65% of the populations who would be gamers have computer or Internet access, which is slightly more than the corresponding rate in Germany." The published figures for French-speaking countries don't make much sense to me because they are so spread out, but I'll probably write more on this when I can translate it. "Chinese millennials are better at coding than their predecessors, thanks to their constant need to play mobile games, which teach game programming in a fun and easy way." "Despite a big French population... French gamers have a poor average level of qualifications due to the starting age of 12 in 2010." Graph
