Senate Democrats of forcing the government to shut down on Monday night when the majority party filibustered a White House-backed bill to fund the health care law. "I suspect the object of these tactics is to force a government shutdown," the Kentucky Republican said. "I hope our colleagues in the House and Senate will be willing to live with the consequences of their actions." The bill failed in a vote that occurred late Monday night in the Senate. It is unclear what will happen as federal funding lapsed at midnight. "I am hopeful we can reach a resolution to keep the government open and finish our work on an omnibus spending package before the end of the fiscal year," McConnell said. A spokesman for the Democratic majority leader, Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada, did not respond to a request for comment Tuesday morning. The defeat of the stopgap spending bill is the latest crisis to result from the government shutdown, which Congress must address by Tuesday night. President Barack Obama urged Americans to step up their efforts to contact Congress to help them avoid a situation in which federal workers miss their paychecks and federal contractors see their government contracts suspended. "We need a solution that's fair to taxpayers and also to those who serve in the federal workforce," he said at a news conference. "I hope that our members of Congress, both in the House and the Senate, will have the courage to listen to the American people, the important concerns of their constituents and get a deal done." McConnell said that during the debate over the White House-backed bill Monday night he had offered to sit down with Obama to discuss a broader package that would avert the crisis. "Over the weekend I advised my colleagues in the Senate that I was prepared to meet with the president of the United States if that would be helpful in resolving this issue," McConnell said. "I continued to urge both Democrats and Republicans, and the b7e8fdf5c8
