And it's been reported that the first RTAS installer for the plug-in is now available from Softube's website. Two plugins are included, the Softube Scratch Engine which allows you to create and edit VST instruments from any RTAS or AAX plug-in, and the Softube Metal Amp Room, which works as an amp based on a true tube amp. To use the Softube Metal Amp Room, load the Softube Metal Amp Room Plug-in and make your desired settings. Then connect the Softube Metal Amp Room to a VST host like the free Stompbox.com VST Host, Audiobus, or AUWIZ. Then you can make use of the plug-in and use the amp's controls to create the desired sound. You could also use a DAW and VST to RTAS adapter like AudioBus or Reaktor to allow you to use the DAW. Note that AudioBus and Reaktor VST-RTAS adapters support AAX and RTAS, but not AU. However, you would run into problems when trying to use the controls of the Metal Amp Room. The controls work only in the VST version (note that the RTAS version does not have the controls). So I'd recommend creating your desired sound using the Metal Amp Room Plug-in only, and then create your audio tracks using your DAW's effects or compression. This works best for me since most of my audio tracks only need compression, eq, and master controls.
