Asymmetry of in vivo autoradiographic somatosensory evoked potentials after complete section of the median nerve. It has recently been reported that unilateral parietal motor evoked potentials (MEPs) were not affected following complete section of the median nerve at the wrist. In the present investigation the effect of median nerve section on somatosensory evoked potentials (SSEPs) from the frontal scalp was studied in 11 healthy adult volunteers. The SSEPs elicited by median nerve stimulation were recorded from a 1-cm posterior midline, parasagittal and vertical strip of cortex on the left and right frontal scalp. SSEPs were elicited using a non-cephalic reference (the vertex). Following median nerve section a marked increase in ipsilateral SSEPs was demonstrated at Cz and Pz, the mean (SEM) latency for N20 being significantly increased for Cz at 146 (6.8) ms (P Under the Radar Blog Archives Select Date... The primary objective of the proposed research will be to develop various analytical methods which can be used for the determination of various phospholipids in biological samples. A newly developed LC/MS/MS technique based on MS/MS in conjunction with multiple reaction monitoring (MRM) mode will be used to study the various molecular species of phospholipids in intact cells and in tissue samples. The aim of the research will be to develop sensitive and selective MRM method for the quantification of various molecular species of phospholipids as well as to develop strategies for the simultaneous quantification of various species of phospholipids. Successful development and application of these methods will lead to more information on the metabolic pathways and physiological regulation
