A study of 246 children with neurosurgical disorders and vertebral malformations has led to the identification of primary disorders of nerve conduction in seven cases. Two were due to a compression of the conus medullaris by a vertebral block, one by a developmental malformation of the spinal canal. In five children the nerve conduction was affected by combined disorders of spinal cord, cervical roots and cervical nerves, some of these children presenting with genuine abnormalities of the peripheral nerves. These disorders of the nerve conduction appear to be a cause of misinterpretation of the neurophysiological data.White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders is quitting the Trump administration, White House chief of staff John Kelly and press secretary Sean Spicer announced Friday. Sanders, a former spokeswoman for the Trump campaign, was asked about her future during Thursday's daily press briefing. "The president's the most consequential person in the world, and I think as you guys have all seen, the amount of access that he has afforded me, there are so many people in this building that don't have access to him," she said. "And I think it's important for him to know that he has to be the most accessible person in the world, as well. I think that's important to have somebody at your side." Sanders then said she had made the decision to leave, and would be leaving in the next few days. "I have at this point in time decided to leave the White House at the end of the year," she said. The announcement came less than an hour after Spicer's Monday evening news conference, where he said he would be leaving after the 2018 midterm elections. Both Kelly and Spicer have been at odds with the president, who has said they are not doing a good job. Trump has not had a press secretary since the inauguration. Sanders was brought in to provide a message to the press and the public that Trump was willing to talk. But Sanders
