Cracked[Serial.Nitroxoline Nitroxoline is a fluoroquinolone antibiotic which is used to prevent and treat urinary tract infections. It is used in combination with trimethoprim or alone for community-acquired urinary tract infections.

It is of the drug class called quinolones and is active against both gram positive and gram negative bacteria. Clinical uses Nitroxoline is used in combination with trimethoprim for the treatment of urinary tract infections.

The combination is as effective as trimethoprim alone in the treatment of cystitis and is more effective than the combination in treatment of pyelonephritis, whereas the combination is equally effective as trimethoprim alone for prostatitis. Side effects A 2003 study found that after 6 months of treatment, as few as 5% of patients who used nitroxoline as first line treatment for lower urinary tract infections had recurrence. A

2014 Cochrane Review found that nitroxoline is less likely than trimethoprim to cause the side-effect diarrhoea; however, when used in combination with trimethoprim, nitroxoline increases the likelihood that diarrhoea will occur. Interactions According to the National Center for Biotechnology Information Drug Interactions (NCBI) and the Australian Medicines Handbook, nitroxoline has interactions with antihistamines and theophylline. The drug should be taken at least 2 hours before or after theophylline. According to the NCBI, nitroxoline should be discontinued two weeks before and after treatment with itraconazole, pimozone, and rifabutin. Pharmacology Nitroxoline is primarily bactericidal. It has good tissue and bile penetration. References Category:Anti-infective agents Category:Diols
