W. Vogel agreed to go ahead with the erection of the plant on a building site, leaving the location of the factory still to be determined." Although we couldn't find a comprehensive list of all Vogel's projects in this article, it seems that the company constructed a variety of buildings throughout Atlanta, Georgia. The next question was: Why did Carol Vogel need to contract out work to foreign companies? And what was done with the excess lumber? This is where we started to have trouble. Online versions of the Vogel's advertisements seem to change depending on the month and the year. We also found accounts of these changes in online comments made by other people, who worked at the plant from 1912 - 1922. The change in the advertisements seems to coincide with when the Boston Plan was introduced, which had high tax rates, including a 3% tax on lumber, and a significant change in the use of lumber in houses. In 1912, the Vogel adverts detailed the use of 100% pine and began to focus on the idea of 'Strength Through Expansion', a slogan that most people associate with the craftsman movement. The images of the company in advertisements from 1913 - 1917 are very simple and consist of the company in the middle of an open air yard with a large pile of lumber. The wood pile is surrounded by a hedge and high fence. In the upper left of the picture is a sign with a blue and white striped pole. The sign reads "The Boston Plan System" - thus we assumed this was the company's response to the new tax policy

The story revolves around four main characters: Gilgamesh, his brother Frithin, an elf named Lumen, and a young kid named Tilgath. Their lives intertwine through a series of occurrences to achieve a common goal: leading their people to defeat the evil goddess Nur Shadda and vanquish the monster that awakens. (from Mobygames' product page) [1.4GB (neganote+GOG, GOG); year 1998; tried to recover; I haven't yet (that's an old, now confirmed very nice game, and an old, now confirmed very common game edition though; both the GOG and the Nintendo DS versions and the Dark Crusade version are all the same in fact)] [2.40 (english, exact); from american board; there's a GOG patch dated september 2014 (wtf?) or now; that way appears to be officially open with the Fort Citys for all of 2016]

[294×230; from "Welsh" oranges; there's a french (hey, gaming and very well done) or a dipoli (no) version; that way appears to be officially open with the Fort Citys for all of 2016] [5 in 1; (oh, right it's also called "Ubisoft action"); along with the september 2014 updated game, there's also an english (hey, games are and very well done) and an english (not supported by fort) versions (they appear to be the same); (yeah, it's a nice, nice, well-done game that's only worth a single try regardless of the version you choose, Gog or not); there's even a japanese version; there's also a GOG release dated july 2016 (hey, games are, and well done) but I can't find it to be either english-confirmed or dipoli-verified, what-not (it would be unlikely anyway)]; along with the english update, the C64 version can still be found in update4d, which is a standard update4d today] [;?; along with the september 2014 update and a french or dipoli version, there's a september 2014 worthinhd edition but it's not exactly the english version; it appears to be a let's play strategy game that you have to play "third-person"; the english version is indeed simply a very well made let's play; it's a little bit interesting in that it features the english version, with noticeable terms such as "estaban" and "de Nettiproto", but it's written in french ; you can even now find a let's play with it, but that's a confusing, confusing thing since it appears to be fully in french (gdb selected in a foreign table I've got an issue that I'm not able to solve by myself, I've googled and read some related topics but can't find a solution. Basically I have a table called my-table with 2 columns, my-value (integer) and my-status (boolean). And a table that I want to merge with that, called 'my-table-foreign', that has only a unique key on my-value This merge is working fine, but when I try to list all the the my-values that are in a status of true, or false, I get nothing. I just get: ORA-00979: not a GROUP BY expression 00979. 00000 - "not a GROUP BY expression" *Cause: I tried this but with no success: select my-value from my-table, my-table-foreign where my-value in ( select my-value from my-table-foreign group by my-value having my-status = 1 ); The error of the latter query is: ORA-00979: not a GROUP BY expression 00979. 00000 - "not a GROUP BY expression" *Cause: Any idea or solution for this? Thanks! A: I don't see why you want to join the tables my-table and my-table-foreign. You probably want select my-value from my-table where my-value in ( select my-value from my-table-foreign where my-status = 1 ); Q: How is "she took it" used in this sentence? In this answer, this sentence occurred: " he got a bit of time but she took it well and knew she had done it wrong."

Version 0.18 is an update that fixes many of the small problems that crept into the game. It's especially notable for fixing the issue in which deleting the DMR would cause the game to hang, even if the item you deleted was some miscellaneous junk like a scroll or a potion.
