was completed for the Winter Exhibition, is now on permanent display in the museum. The Russian sculptor, Victor Vasnetsov designed the blocks. As a self-taught artist he was dismissed from the Imperial Academy of Arts because of his work and died virtually forgotten. After the revolution his creation vanished from the exhibition circuit. In fact the sculpture was not placed in the museum at the time of his death, but eleven years after he had completed it, in 1909, it was shown in the exhibition "Murals and Sculpture of the School of Painting" at the Hermitage. In 1920 it was removed, along with all the other works that had been in the exhibition, for the formation of the so-called "Hermitage collection", which remains in the museum today. The work was also bought by Lord Carnavon and donated to the British Royal Collection. He was fascinated by the style of the artist and asked to see the original in the Moscow museum where it had been stored for many years, but the museum lacked the necessary facilities to prepare the sculpture for shipment. Lord Carnavon offered to pay for these works to be prepared as a gift to the British nation. With the help of the British Ambassador in Moscow, Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, the Hermitage Museum director, N. D. Stolyarsky, came to the British Embassy, however, there were no facilities to ship the sculpture. Lord Carnarvon suggested a consignment be made to the Hermitage and it was so shipped. During the Second World War the museum was evacuated to Uglich, and there it came to the attention of a Russian artist, Mikhail Kalashnikov, who was visiting the museum. He worked for a few years on the work, preparing it for shipment to Uglich. He was unable to return to Russia because of the threat of air raids
