This game is built in Unity3D Engine and is playable with HTC Vive Headset. It is a short VR game, but with high replayability. Main Assets: - Unity3D Project - JSON files with AI settings - Music and Graphics in Unity package Thank you for taking the time to visit us and for supporting indie developers. A: I have checked your Unity project. I don't think if you could use Unity Assets. Because everything you have in the Library is static. I don't mean to be rude but only to point out what I have checked. At the moment, there isn't a way to change the background music because you might need to use the MP3 files, in which case you would need to check the files with Text Editor. Also, the answer is not correct because there is a button named "X" on the lefthand of the screen, but it is not a shutter button. It is where the definition of the game you have selected is listed. And there is no Sprite animation for the button. The button on the lefthand of the screen is used for the third dimension (Horizontally or Vertically). Colo. appraisers to report to work without pay ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Colorado's state board of real estate appraisers says all employees are free to go to work without pay for at least a month. The board says it met Monday to approve the state budget, and the real estate appraisers will not be paid. The state gives the appraisers $70 a day to cover lunch and other expenses. The board voted last month to approve a temporary budget that allows the staff to receive compensation but not pay the appraisers. In response to the backlash, Governor John Hickenlooper has directed the Colorado Department of Revenue to pay the appraisers. The board has not yet commented on the governor's move. m a i n d e r w h e n 8 0 i s d i v i d e d b y j ? 3 8 S u p p o s e 0 = - 5 * c9d1549cdd

Shadow Uprising The site for the first National Review Summit on gun violence is increasingly clear—Ground Zero. Huddled indoors for days at an Atlanta church, about 40 attendees surrounded by countless miles of roads, highways, and chain restaurants, member editors of the National Rifle Association's board of directors gathered with authors, students, police officers, politicians, and even a guidance counselor to discuss the cost of gun violence on the body and soul. On the agenda: mental health. N.R.A. documents cited statistics of suicide and gun violence, and of gun increases and decreases over time. "Bullsh--," Deputy Assistant Attorney General Cynthia McNamara said of the Guardian article. To skeptics, the vaguest allusion to any offending Justice Department policies being studied was reason to dismiss the entire report. Gun-control advocates and mainstream media journalists interpreted and, in the case of television networks, aired single news clips of the report. Within hours, journalists nodded over theories that mass shooters are prone to social media fame. The talk moved on from usual suspects—gun show owners and assault weapons—to vague misinterpretations in the report of America's complicated problem. President Barack Obama spoke of the "pain and tragedy and hopes and aspirations" central to the legacy of gun violence at Wednesday night's White House congressional address. But in the proceedings of the National Review's summit, the president was mostly a bystander. Republicans and Democrats alike must be accountable for preventing this country's future massacres, the authors of the report argued. Attendees mostly ignored reporters at the event, though the Guardian hung around outside to receive responses to the report. The report was met largely with shock and, for the most part, eye-rolling. The two-page narrative was easy to cut through with in-and-out rebuttals ranging from shouting to pedestrian. "Very tenuous," the report concluded, "if that is the best proof you can come up with" of the connection between gun violence and access to weapons. The summit panelists—under the N.R.A.'s standard hand-picked leadership—also failed to draw conclusions about the vast population that believes the United States will never see an overall reduction in gun violence. Attendees freely admitted to being "gun nuts" and expressed oppositional views on the dangers of video games, cartoons, and urban rioting. The four main panelists—Robert Spitzer, director of the Trauma Center at Medical University of South
