I am not sure what the difference is between my ($a, $b, $c) = split //, $string; and my ($a) = split //, $string; my ($b) = split //, $string; my ($c) = split //, $string; A: In the latter case, $a contains the word returned from split, $b contains what split returned for $a, and so on. In the former case, the words are put into three separate variables with their own names. This is clearer if you add error messages as well, such as my $a = q{}; my ($a) = split //, $string; my ($b) = split //, $string; my ($c) = split //, $string; If you run this and it works, you know that split has been run successfully, which is useful to know if you are doing some other operations later. If it dies with a 'Too many arguments' or similar error, you know that some part of the split has failed, and you can figure out which part it was. Q: add_field and add_page limit I found this great script to add a fieldgroup to a page, it worked fine when I was trying to add it to my multi-site, now I have a unique problem, I have a page that I can't add it c9d1549cdd

Simply can't get used to a watch counting down the time instead of the time! I will be giving mine away and will recommend if you're thinking of getting one!
