If no file is found, open the folder called "data", find settings.xml, and it should be there. Look for the line which says 1 and remove the tags. Look for the line which says 1 and remove the tags. If the line isn't there, you can skip this step. Now you can run the game normally. If an error pops up, open the "data" folder and look for settings.xml, and change the value of to 0. If the line isn't there, it's because the file is corrupt. If you made it this far and the error still pops up, try running the game in safe mode. Exit the game after the safe mode starts, and try to get through it as normal. If it still doesn't work, make sure your OS is 64-bit Windows 7 or higher. Make sure you're running the game at least at a resolution of 1920×1080. If everything doesn't work, and you still have access to your hard drive, create a folder called "settings.json", and put a file in there called "settings.json", and put the line "1" in it. It doesn't matter what the line is, just put it there to get around a bug. Save the settings.json and rename it as settings.xml, and make sure you aren't running the game as admin.
