FIFA is the world's leading sports franchise that has sold over 240 million copies worldwide, and remains the best-selling sports game of all time. Fans can play a variety of authentic games featuring their favourite clubs in various competitions and with the most iconic players from around the world. FIFA Mobile is the official mobile game of the EA SPORTS FIFA franchise, launched in October 2018. It includes features and content of the FIFA series, including pro and community seasons, exciting new features, leagues and clubs. Q&A Arian Zuckerman, FIFA gameplay director: FIFA has been the catalyst behind a generation of soccer video games that have changed the way the industry was played, and continues to shape the future of sports games and eSports. We'd like to take the time to have a frank discussion on football, gaming and FIFA's place in them. Why did the decision to remove Diktat from the game come about? We've always been clear with our players that FIFA is a game of people; the Diktat decision was created to ensure that gameplay remains fair for all players, regardless of nationality. During the past few years the game has evolved to include more player realism, real-world team and player movements, and realistic team tactics as seen in the new 'FIFA Development' update. What is the latest update in the FIFA Development series? Each FIFA Development update is focused on how the game uses footballs physics, so every update is focused on one or two key components of the engine. This time, we've focused on the most imitated aspect of football: the ball flight. Last time we spoke, you mentioned that EA's goal was to take the game to the next level, specifically focusing on delivering a new era of innovation and improving the game on a year-by-year basis. How has this worked in real terms? The FIFA Development series offers developers the opportunity to dive in and help us advance the gameplay, from realistic player fatigue and stamina to fundamental gameplay innovations and more. [We're] always listening to player feedback, but in addition to listening, we also drive innovation. Recently, we've seen wide adoption of the new Penalty Kick Control. The kick is a fundamental and integral part of football. We wanted to make sure that FIFA's system, which has been the gold standard in FIFA for over a decade, continues to evolve and modernise and to
