Three days later, the USMNT hosts England at Gillette Stadium in the 2018 MLS Cup Playoffs. The last time these two teams met, the Americans won in extra time. So the question is, will that translate into a positive result on Friday night? When the two teams last met, the Americans needed extra time to secure a 1-0 win over England at Wembley Stadium. There are too many variables that could swing the match in either direction to analyze the deadlocked encounter. But consider that the United States have scored the most goals in all international matches, with 86 in 105 games, and have not lost since Sept. 17, 2014. This speaks to the productivity of the team, the continuity in the system, and the trust the team has in itself. The USMNT recorded a 2-1 win over the Red Devils at Avaya Stadium in San Jose on Jan. 15 and were opportunistic. It wasn't until the 90th minute of that match that the U.S. took a 1-0 lead on Nani's goal. That's the one and only time the USMNT has posted a goal in the first minute of a match. The Americans were in the spotlight of American soccer circles once again during their showpiece match against Portugal, which was played in New Jersey. In front of 100,000-plus people at MetLife Stadium, they held off Portugal in extra time and then came from behind to tie the series with a 1-0 win in the second extra time. It is less than three weeks since that match, and the USMNT is expected to face England. There is no two ways about it.
