Features of "HyperMotion Technology" in FIFA 22: • Utilizes movement of more than 22 players on the pitch to offer more realistic game-play • Import player attributes from the template of the real-life players • Developed using Real Player Motion Data • Positional awareness of real-life player model and shapes • Player models rendered with natural movement and control • Player poses and movements synchronized with surrounding players on screen "HyperMotion Technology" delivers more realistic game-play than any previous FIFA title. The technology was designed and developed by Peter Schipper of renowned FIFA developer Mad Dog Studios. In addition to leveraging a wide array of real-life data from the detailed motion capture (Mocap) of more than 22 players, key elements of "HyperMotion Technology" include: • Each player model has been developed using detailed, high resolution motion capture data of real-life players • Dynamic dynamic lighting based on real player skin tone • Unique, player-specific expressions based on real player emotions expressed by body language and audio • Attention to the clothing choices of each player as well as real-life character design • Advanced AI systems designed to mimic that of real-life footballers, passing, controlling the ball and shooting with their specific type of foot • Improved goalkeepers' positioning and behavior "HyperMotion Technology" also delivers gameplay improvements across every aspect of the game. Improved player movements, controls, AI, goalkeepers' positioning and behavior make FIFA the most immersive football game on the market and much more playable than its predecessor. The technology also highlights the player model for each player, which is customizable based on player attributes from the real-life player. It also contains numerous other improvements that make every player feel differently. The improvements include: Improved player movements • Greater control over player movements, including the ability to execute small dribble steps and head movement • Greater awareness of the opponent • More natural and realistic way to control the ball • Improved positioning of teammates and opponents • Improved AI movement and player behavior • Real-life foot properties and characteristics of specific type of feet are taken into account in the game engine • Improved passing and shooting • New pass controls with double-tap and rolling, like it is done in the real game "HyperMotion Technology" introduces an improved audio system that lets the player hear a large number of sounds, such as goal kicks, a shot that goes in the net, a defender's
