The Dexamethasone Suppression Test (DST) and the Dexamethasone Stimulation Test (DST-ST) were compared in 18 female patients with major depressive episode, 31 female patients with somatic disorders and 25 healthy control subjects. Depressive subjects had significantly lower mean dexamethasone serum level than the other two groups. The mean cortisol level at 8 a.m. in depressed patients was significantly higher than in the control group. There was a significant correlation between the mean dexamethasone level in the DST and the cortisol level at 8 a.m. in the DST-
