London, April 17 (ANI): Smokers face stunted growth and a shorter life because of early ageing, say researchers. The British Journal of Sports Medicine published an article on Thursday, which said that increased nicotine exposure during adolescence can have long-term effects on the immune system and hormones. This implies that the body has an inherited mechanism to regulate the amount of nicotine that passes from the environment through the person's body via inhalation. "For example, a man who smoked 20 cigarettes a day, compared with a non-smoker, will emit around 40 percent more nicotine, all of which enters his body. "The balance between nicotine and the anti-nicotine ability is perfect. If the body has the anti-nicotine ability, then it will stop him from inhaling more nicotine, but if it doesn't, he will inhale more nicotine," said co-author of the research, Professor Bernard Taylor from King's College London. The researchers say that although many of the short-term effects of smoking can be beneficial, the effects of later smoking are detrimental, because they affect growth, puberty, bone growth and fertility. The scientists say smoking during the adolescent phase of life could affect the body's ability to clear nicotine, leading to a heavy, daily dose. "During adolescence, you get your peak in the production of antibodies and also the highest conversion of testosterone to oestrogen. To get to adulthood, you need to make sure that your body doesn't convert that testosterone too much because it can cause infertility." The researchers compared tobacco-containing cigarette smoker and a control group consisting of non-smokers of similar age. "We compared the antibody response to tobacco with that of people not exposed to any tobacco, and we found that the antibody response was much higher in the smokers. "However, their antibodies against the nicotine were only five percent lower than those of non-smokers," Taylor said. The researchers found that the non-smoker's bodies have an active ability to inactivate (clear) the nicotine molecules from the cigarette smoke. "These measurements give us a way of measuring the anti-nicotine ability. This is the first time that we have been able to measure the anti-nicotine ability in humans," Taylor said. ### What's New In?

Part of the reason NBC claims it has been so off-the-charts brilliant these past few weeks is that it received 40 Emmy noms last week. Among them: Outstanding Comedy Series, for "The Voice," and Outstanding Lead Actress in a Comedy Series, for Candice Bergen. (She's one of the four best actresses in the category, along with Michelle Pfeiffer, Jane Krakowski and Julia Louis-Dreyfus.) "The Voice" has been an Emmy powerhouse this season. It has won for two Supporting Actress categories (Anna Camp and CeeLo Green) and is one of the favorites in the other three. But when you strip out the musical categories, the competition gets real. Pfeiffer's the only lead actress who has won so far. Louis-Dreyfus, on the other hand, is the sole nominee for the Emmy she's been working so hard for. It's the story of every new TV show: How is it going to catch up to "Friends"? And what if it doesn't? It's a question that's become more pressing to bear in the age of a glut of new offerings. Every single night on the broadcast networks there's a new show on the air, and many of them are taking the time to prove whether they're going to be Emmy-worthy, too. (One of those shows? NBC's once-promising lineup of "Revolution," "Scorpion," "Wayward Pines" and "The Blacklist." All four are in danger of not getting their first Emmy nods as nominees.) "The Voice" has been far more dominant than the network's actual fall season would have suggested. With six wins out of the seven it's eligible for, it has earned a spot on every candidate's short list. But so has CBS' "Person of Interest," which returns Thursday night. The network's other dramas "NCIS: Los Angeles" and "NCIS: New Orleans" are both finalists for outstanding drama series — and could also get a third win next week for "NCIS: Los Angeles." Also eligible this week is "
