The University of Virginia student who killed a classmate and injured others in a late-night crash that authorities say was intentional will not be charged criminally, the university announced. On Friday, UVA said William Hickman, 19, will not be charged with two counts of second-degree murder, two counts of malicious wounding and one count of failure to stop in an injury accident after an investigation by the Orange

County (Virginia) Circuit's sheriff's office. A statement released from UVA on Friday said the "university is pleased that its students are safe and no one was seriously injured in the incident." Earlier Friday, Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam announced that the investigation was complete and that Hickman would not be charged, The Associated Press reported. "I said all along, when asked, that when evidence showed the conduct of the accused at UVA was not criminal or prosecutable, charges should not be brought," Northam said in a statement. Related: Tough Questions for Accused Student Driver of Charlottesville Crash After the crash, Hickman drove a car full of students on the sidewalk — into pedestrians and other vehicles — and injured 18 others, officials have said. It has been reported that Hickman's parents have told NBC News that their son's actions were an accident, and that he was "out of his mind" on drugs at the time. Hickman's lawyer has also said his client was under the influence. "It never should have happened," the Hickmans' attorney, Linwood Groce, told NBC News on Wednesday. "He was a 19-year-old kid, he was at a young age." The university said in a statement on Friday
