The central nervous system of the arboreal planarian Dugesia japonica has a pair of ganglionic thalamus-like nuclei and two pairs of circumesophageal connectives. The two ganglionic thalamus-like nuclei are an anterior and a posterior ganglion. In the anterior ganglion, the serotonin-immunoreactive neurons are numerous in the marginal zone of the cerebral ganglia. A pair of serotonin-immunoreactive fibers is associated with each of the small neuropil fibers of the posterior ganglion. The circumesophageal connectives are connected to the stomatogastric connectives. In the stomatogastric connectives there are numerous serotonin-immunoreactive neurons. These neurons are round to oval in shape and appear to be distinct from the serotonin-immunoreactive neurons in the circumesophageal connectives. i s - 3

Mirror 1. Software is an essentialÂ . of the overlying roof.
The plastic sheeting is, however, only somewhat effective at preventing the interior of a building from being wetted by rain or snow. Since the conventional transparent water-repellant sheeting of the type shown in the earlier-identified in-line, U.S. patent application Ser. No.
11/737,175 is light in weight, relatively thin in nature, and has very little tensile strength, there are manufacturing and installation problems involved in attaching such a water-repellant sheet to the underlying roofing membrane. That is, the sheet must be firmly attached to the relatively thin membrane. If it is not firmly attached, it will tend to blow off the membrane in the event of inclement weather. Although the glass laminate roofs described in the U.S. patents to Rogers U.S. Pat. Nos.
3,664,041 and 3,908,762 have been satisfactory for many types of buildings and building installations, they have not proved to be entirely satisfactory in all instances. The installation of such an overlaid roof can involve a rather complicated procedure, involving first the installation of the glass membrane, then the installation of the air space, and finally the installation of the moisture-resistant sheeting. Consequently, the Rogers glass laminate roofs have not been widely accepted by the building industry, which prefers to use the conventional steel or concrete roof structures with their attendant simplicity of installation. It is an object of the present invention to provide an improved laminated glass roof structure of the type described in the U.S. patents to Rogers, U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,664,041 and 3,908,762. It is an object of the present invention to provide an improved laminated glass roof structure that is relatively uncomplicated to install, and is especially suitable for use with light-weight, glass panes. It is an object of the present invention to provide an improved laminated glass roof structure that effectively prevents rain and snow from entering a building. It is an object of the present invention to provide an improved laminated glass roof structure that can be manufactured in a relatively uncomplicated manner, and yet that is not subject to warping or deformation when attached to the underlying roofing membrane. It is also an object of the present invention to provide an improved
