Efficacy and safety of satiflipid in non-diabetic patients with chronic kidney disease. Chronic kidney disease (CKD) is associated with high incidence of dyslipidemia. Although statins have proven to be beneficial in improving cardiovascular outcomes in dialysis patients, they could not achieve the same level of efficacy in nondialysis patients with hyperlipidemia. Recently, a synthetic omega-3-fatty acid has been proved to reduce atherosclerosis at least partially through its anti-inflammatory and anti-oxidative effects. Here, we assessed the effects of a small dose of satiflipid on lipid profile in nondiabetic patients with stage 3-5 CKD receiving hemodialysis. A randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled study was conducted to test whether satiflipid and fenofibrate could produce favourable changes in lipid profile in nondiabetic stage 3-5 CKD patients with hyperlipidemia receiving hemodialysis. Changes in lipid levels were assessed by mean differences (95% CI) between baseline and week 24, with adjustments for sex, age, body mass index, albumin, pre- and post-dialysis systolic blood pressure, urea, and creatinine levels. Twenty-seven patients were randomized and 26 patients completed the study. Compared with the placebo group, patients receiving satiflipid exhibited significant decreases in total cholesterol (-24.9 mg/dl, 95% CI: -24.9, -24.8), low-density lipoprotein cholesterol (-33.5 mg/dl, -31.4, -35.6), and apolipoprotein B (-19.7 mg/dl, -17.5, -22.0). In contrast, there was no significant change in triglyceride levels in either group. This small dose of satiflipid showed a favorable effect on dyslipidemia in nondialysis patients with stage 3-5 CKD receiving hemodialysis. Longer and larger studies are needed to assess whether satiflipid can reduce cardiac risk in this population.The subject matter described herein relates to a backplane.
