Neuronal mechanisms of semantic processing: a meta-analysis of functional imaging studies. Functional neuroimaging has been used to identify the brain regions involved in language processing. However, despite several recent studies on this topic, a functional account of language processing is still lacking. The aim of this meta-analysis was to identify and summarize the main results of functional imaging studies on semantic processing. An extensive search was made of the literature in Medline (until January 2006) and of conferences (until June 2005). The inclusion criteria were to focus on the semantic processing of verbal stimuli, to compare it against a comparison condition, and to use either positron emission tomography or functional magnetic resonance imaging. In all, 31 articles were included in the meta-analysis. We found activation of a large-scale network that included anterior inferior temporal gyrus (BA 21), frontal operculum, posterior middle temporal gyrus (BA 37), posterior superior temporal gyrus (BA 22), and parietal operculum. This network corresponds to the Broca's region. In addition, several subcortical regions were activated, namely the hippocampus and anterior thalamus. Activation of more frontal regions (BA 47, 46, and 10) was also observed. We found no common activation for antonyms compared with synonyms in the semantic processing of verbal stimuli. Different patterns of semantic effects were also observed depending on the cognitive process under study. The present meta-analysis found several regions of activation that could support the functional account of language, and that contributed to the identification of the neural substrates that are critical for the recognition of syntactic and semantic relationships.

de casos nuevos que se están presentando, y que por ello es el momento de examinar también los problemas relacionados con la seguridad de los jugadores de esos estadios. P. ¿Se ha pensado en poner una cuota de la sociedad o de la Unión Europea para que se pueda hacer ese trabajo? R. Desde el punto de vista de la Unión Europea, por una parte, se se ve obligada a aplicar el principio de que tiene que estar presente un espacio público neutral e imparcial de desarrollo e investigación. Por otra parte, como dice el teórico británico Robin Hay, dice que en un sistema de reparto en el que a una empresa le dan una propiedad de un solo usuario, lo suyo es que esa empresa sea muy buena, o sea, nos pone en una posición muy favorita. P. ¿Es posible que el canadiense se dedique al fútbol desde sus oficinas donde se juega al golf y al tenis cuando se trate de golpes de los jugadores? R. No, en absoluto. Son dos cosas muy distintas. Hay una serie de categorías que son competencias de la Unión Europea. Que toda la información sea centralizada no implica la centralización en un solo país. Esa es una decisión que tomaría cada institución, por ejemplo, el Financial Times, que es una publicación de impresiones, dedicada a la política, etc. P. No se puede tener en cuenta al jugador como persona, y no se debe tratar de condenar a nadie. Solo se puede hablar sobre esas cosas desde un punto de vista penal. R. No, no, no. En el caso del fútbol los del
