Determination of the byproduct of gadodiamide hydrolysis (GW) with a limit of detection of 6 ng/mL in mice plasma and 2 ng/mL in buffer media was developed using ion chromatography (IC). The detection limit was determined by injection of different solutions of GW ranging from 10.0 to 500.0 ng/mL. The oxidation reaction was conducted by heating the sample at different time periods (15, 30, 45, 60, 90, 120, 180, 240, 360, 480, and 600 min). Four ionic species (GWG1, GWG2, GWG3, and GWG4) were determined to identify the main decomposition reactions of GW. Decomposition reactions were observed to proceed in buffer media, but slow ( $\sim$ 30%) reaction rate was observed in plasma. Further, the structure of the byproduct (GWG1) was determined to be GWG3 and hydroxylation was the reaction step occurring after the conversion of the phenolic hydroxyl group to oxime derivatives.

Want to buy amex travel money card, credit cards, wow gold selling, retail store, business, CAPE GIRARDEAU, MO — An excited crowd of about 200 residents and tourists looked on from the banks of the Missouri River as a 350-pound, 1,700-year-old fossilized plesiosaur, dubbed "Missouri P" by the local news media, was retrieved from a sandbar during the "Liquid Cryptozoology" expedition organized by the L.E. Piccione Company. "I'm totally amazed," said adventurer and noted cryptozoologist Will Wilson. "I didn't see a single piece of driftwood when we first landed, so I'm thrilled that I found this thing. It's got to be prehistoric!" The creature, which is believed to be a partial rhino, was found in the middle of the mighty Missouri river, which just happens to be the largest freshwater river in the world. "If you ask me, the Missouri River is one of the biggest mysteries in the world," said Wilson. "Why haven't we figured out where it goes? I love it!" Wilson's team was working with University of Missouri paleontologists, who confirm the fossil is a thalassocotyle. "We think it's a member of the the leiosaur family, but we can't be certain until we get back to the lab," said University of Missouri paleontologist Dr. Paul Burchart. "We've set up shop here in Cape Girardeau. I figured if anyone was going to find a living thalassocotyle, it would be the experts from the university," said Wilson. "It's a completely new species. We may end up naming it after you, Dr. Burchart." As to the possible location of thalassocotyle's natural habitat, the curator of the Missouri Historical Society, Irl Williams, was unable to comment. "I'm sorry, but I'm not allowed to say anything," he said. "I have to sign a confidentiality agreement." Get your mischievous paws on Alabama's most famous re
