With Markup Import, you can use paper feedback from source documents—like paper contracts or memos—to import into your drawing for easy collaboration. You can start with the most recent version of the contract or add changes to your existing drawing. To help make paper feedback easier to use, AutoCAD offers a new Markup Assist feature that displays the changes you make as you send paper feedback. If you want to make sure your source document is exactly as it should be, you can also use Markup Assist to review source documentation for accuracy. The Status Bar in the status bar and Modify panel: The AutoCAD status bar, Modify panel, and Source window are all now shown in a single list that's easily scrollable, whether you're using the mouse or the keyboard. In addition, the status bar can be toggled to always show the top four most recently used toolbars, windows, and commands, allowing you to quickly access items you use often. You can also customize the status bar to show more or less of the toolbars and windows you use most often. A new Draw Now button is also available in the status bar, and it allows you to draw your next object in the active viewport in three different ways: • Select a single selection or multiple objects in the active viewport by clicking and dragging. • Click to insert a new freehand polyline (or circle or arc) object. • Click to insert a 3D object with parameters. The left or right crosshairs can also be used to specify which way you want to add the next object. You can drag and drop the new object into another viewport to move it. Quickly swap between sheets: A new command is available when you open the status bar that lets you quickly swap between sheets. To use it, just open the status bar and choose "Sheets." Get even more of the most useful toolbars and windows in AutoCAD by selecting the "Show more toolbars" checkbox in the status bar customization section.
