struggling in the mid-1960s to gain national recognition as a film actor, he would frequently stop in the small watering hole and smoke cigars as he watched the show. History The bar was named for owner Douglas "Cossy" Patterson. During Prohibition, Patterson was a bootlegger, and over the years had acquired the liquor license for a number of restaurants in Portland. By the 1980s, the restaurant was in steady decline, and Patterson opted to enter into a legal partnership with a much larger, more established local restaurant. The pair called it Cossy's, but the name was not much of a success, and in 1989 the bar was sold, and an image of Nicholson, one of the bar's most frequent patrons, appeared on the sign. Personnel The bar is still owned by Patterson's son, Dale. The original owner of the bar, Patterson, died in 1990. The original ten part jukebox consisted of nine jukeboxes.

Patterson replaced it with the Cossy Selectix. The selectix currently contains more than 400 music selections and is now run by Eugene Lehman and Dan 'The Dude' Kolat. References External links
