Hence, as “mere” partners, their general partners would have no legal right to sue on the obligations of the partnership. Disappointed Partners When a partner quits a partnership without the consent of the other partners, the partner who has legal title (and legal obligations) to the partnership’s property is called the disappointed partner; the other partners are called undisposed of partners. Generally, the undisposed of partners may not sue the ex-partner for breach of their partnership obligations. If they can show that a partner’s breach of their partnership obligations is a material element of damage, they may sue for damages instead. It is generally for the courts to determine who is a partner, and who is an undisposed of partner, and who is an ex-partner, if necessary. However, an agreement between partners may provide that, upon the expiration of the stated period of the partnership, a partner who resigns will automatically become an ex-partner and the other partners will be entitled to do whatever they would have had the partner done. If You Are a Partner in a Partnership, What Should You Do? Whether you are a partner in a partnership or not, you can face the possibility of being sued for partnership obligations—including for personal, job-related, or household obligations that are incurred in the name of the partnership. As a partner or as a partner in a partnership 6d1f23a050
