Conventionally, an example of a laser oscillator for generating a laser beam for irradiation used in a medical field, a manufacturing field and the like is a laser oscillator including an excitation light source for generating a first excitation light (a pulse laser) and a dye solution for providing a second excitation light (laser) to a solution is known (for example, see Patent Literature 1). The laser oscillator is characterized in that dye can be repeatedly used (dye recycling). The dye recycling is used to increase a lifetime of the laser oscillator because non-return of a wavelength of a laser beam, emitted from a laser resonator, is reduced. Further, in a dye recycling method of a conventional laser oscillator, a liquid is collectively circulated to efficiently obtain an output with high energy (to repeat a laser oscillation). In the conventional laser oscillator, a pump light source and a laser oscillation source are provided in a substantially same container or a part of a container having the liquid circulation passage is partitioned to be two independent containers. Sarisar The Sarisar () is a district in southeastern Marseille, France. Location The Sarisar district borders the districts of Bouches-du-Rhône in the north, Port-de-Ville in the west and the districts of Grasse in the east and Saint-Raphaël in the south. The district is located about a half mile from the Mediterranean Sea, and is part of the large, modern urban sprawl of Marseille. History The Sarisar neighborhood was built in the early 1960s as a new commercial centre for the city of Marseille. From the late 1970s and the 1980s, it gained prominence as the "new" center of European prostitution. In the 1990s, the Zénith de l'Etoile was built in the Sarisar to replace the old Palais de Cong 6d1f23a050
